Are gym lockers safe?

Most of us would probably assume that our belongings were safe in a locked locker, but it can be easy for a professional thief to break in and steal precious personal belongings. In this post, we'll be looking at which padlocks we'd recommend for gym lockers, and what steps you can take to protect your possessions at the gym.

Where should a gym locker be located?

It's tempting when you're in the gym to choose a locker that's tucked away in a corner, but this just gives thieves more cover to steal from you. Instead, choose a locker that's in a high traffic area, likely in the main area, near to the showers or the gym. Never use an unsecured locker for your gym bag.

How much clearance do you need for a gym locker?

Shackle clearance should be at a minimum, so thieves don't have space to apply cutters to your padlock. However, bear in mind the type of lock you'll be using in the gym, as you may need a certain amount of clearance to use your padlock easily. Our favourite padlocks for gym lockers:
