Hong Kong resident goes searching for perfect retro Porsche and finds it in a very unique place. High-dollar Porsche restomods are all the rage these days. Shops like Singer to Workshop 5001 are cranking out polished automotive jewels, cars that combine vintage style with modern performance and comfort. And it's easy to see why.

In 1974, Mattel re-worked the U.S. casting for the Flying Color cars. Although the cars were also produced in Hong Kong without a sunroof, the design is actually close to the original U.S. Custom Volkswagen. The parts of the Flying Colors Volkswagen, however, are not interchangeable with the earlier no-sunroof Hong Kong Custom Volkswagens.

If its a balast coil on a full 12V system it will get hotter. A ballast coil is typically rated at running 6-9V. When cranking the engine the balast resistor is bypassed and the coil gets 12V for a better spark. The balast resistance reduces with load so when on a blast the coil also gets a bit more power but would normally supply 9V to the coil.
